Hello,

The DMCA notification we received and acted upon has been forwarded to you by RLP. That document is the sole document we were acting upon in taking action against in moving the single image hosted on our server offline as the notification contained all of the required elements under Digital Millennium Copyright Act (512(c)(3)(A)(i-vi)). We are aware of slabbed.org and its critical speech are under attack by spurious actors using out of jurisdiction court orders and misusing intellectual property law in trying to get the site offline. We have silently to you pushed back against several such attempts in our commitment to the laws of the United States and the freedom of speech they afford. We will not take down any content related to claims of defamation/libel/butthurtness/etc without an injunction with jurisdiction in Los Angeles, CA USA in which we are named. As your customer has indicated that a DMCA counter notification will be provided, we will certainly act as the law specified with that and allow the specific image back online in 10-14 business days. Please let us know if you have any further questions or concerns in this matter.

Glen,
